

China Risks & AXJ Spill-overs

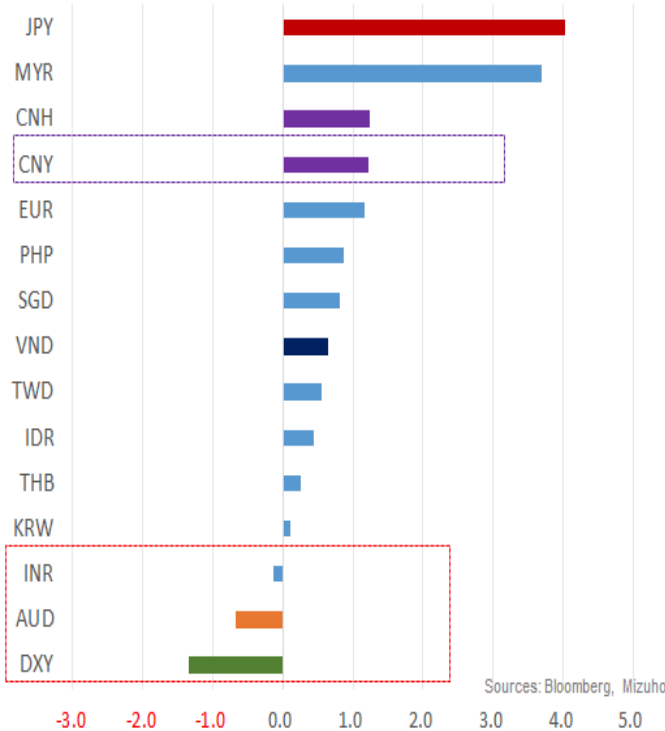

In a Nutshell: China macro, and related currency (CNY and CNH) risks have been understated in this episode of global “risk off” and attendant asset market meltdown. But this is a quirk of global sell-off/catch-down with long beaten down CNY assets and not standalone China buffer. Certainly not China optimism despite glimmer of Politburo backstop. Point being, China macro risks remain significant, and it follows that CNH is not quite out of the woods as structural drag forces amid chronic confidence deficit conspire with unremitting geo-political threats. In this context, spill-over AXJ downside risks are prominent. And further accentuated by on-going risks of JPY-funded “carry unwind” as the BoJ remains susceptible to JPY over-steer. Finally, US recession risks that have dragged USD this time, could arguably flip into AXJ pressures if that results in adverse demand shocks being priced in. As such, despite Fed rate cuts bets coming into view, we assess a bumpy path to Fed pivot with distinct downside CNH and AXJ fumbles.

China Risks: Distraction, Not Deliverance

- The threat of a meltdown in global markets yesterday merely provided distraction, not deliverance, from China’s on-going structural and geo-economic pressures.
- This is critical context for appreciating (pun intended) CNH surge yesterday (at one point below 7.10), which has now partly retraced (to mid-7.14 as at the point of writing).
- What’s more, ~1.5% gains in CNY since late last week broadly corresponds to the wider USD sell-off (in DXY terms). So, a benign beta play, not an astounding alpha coup.
- Accordingly, Chinese equities down “just” 1-2% on a day that Nikkei plunged >12% and Nasdaq was down 3.4% (following Friday’s 2.4% drop) is not exceptionalism in its own right.
- But instead speaks to relative buffer in an external storm given already beaten down valuations but far from a resolution of fundamental structural woes.
- Admittedly, there were more concrete and tangible support measures from the Politburo for consumers, tech, real estate and new industries.
- And to be sure, these are undeniably welcome pain relief, that merely assuage threats of unabated pro-cyclical demand-side pressures.
- Nonetheless, in totality, the measures fall far short of being a panacea.
- Crucially, not a (longer) game-changer given the scale and breadth of geo-economic threats colliding with generational socio-political shifts.
- A particular sticking point being, that demand-side confidence shortfall remains chronic and is only superficially acknowledged, not quite addressed.
- Notably, unresolved income hurdles (imposed by elevated youth unemployment and dimming income prospects) and wealth impediments (property, inequality, etc.) continue to hobble the ability to durably lift demand/confidence.

- Quantitatively, this may potentially even open the door for incrementally lifting growth momentum by 0.2-0.4%-pt (per annum) over 6-18 months, albeit depending on execution and follow-through.
- But the ability to extricate China from a structural downward drift in growth potential to 4.0-4.5% range (if that) remains fraught.
- More worryingly, China’s chronic confidence deficit remains an economic overhang that suppresses demand-led growth multipliers, compromises stimulus efforts and stifles CNH/CNY assets amid capital outflow pressures.

BoJ-US Jobs Trigger (End July to 5th Aug): EM Asia FX moves Mostly Playing off Weaker USD and CNH Buoyancy. But JPY Carry Unwind a Latent Risk.

YTD (End-2023 to 5th Aug): But EM Asia FX Remain Compromised More Broadly. And AXJ Pressures Can Re-emerge if JPY Squeeze, which has Reclaimed >80% of its Losses at at mid-2024, Mounts.

FX Risks: AXJ Spillovers

- CNH Opportunistic Bounce ...: What this means is that any opportunistic CNH bounce is best not to be mistaken for lasting relief; much less a sustained, unfettered rally.
- ... Not Out of the Woods: Simply put, CNH is not out of the proverbial woods, remaining vulnerable to continued pressures from pre-existing confidence issues as well as vulnerabilities to fresh geopolitical shocks.
- Attendant AXJ Vulnerabilities: In turn, adverse CNH ripples could make of a bumpy path for EM Asia FX given entrenched trade and financial linkages.
- USD Pivot Not a Given: Notably, “USD pivot” on Fed pivot bets to drive AXJ rebound are overly simplistic, masking latent vulnerabilities. In fact, if US pivot invokes demand shock “risk off”, AXJ could initially pullback.

- JPY Carry Unwind Drag Potential: What’s more, with accentuated JPY volatility likely to be feature of the path to Fed pivot, elevated risks of JPY-funded carry unwind also pose potential drag to AXJ.
- BoJ Susceptibility for JPY Over-steer: Especially given the susceptibility of the BoJ to inadvertently over-steer on JPY guidance amid tightening signals misconstrued and dynamic Fed pivot expectations amplifying inherent JPY volatility.
- Negligent to Ig Near-Term Volatility: All said, despite potential for AXJ pick-up 12-18 months out, it is negligent dismiss near-term volatility that frustrates an unfettered ascend for AXJ simply on account of Fed pivot.
- A Conspiracy of Risks: Point being, a conspiracy of lingering China risks, JPY carry unwind that remains “live” even if checked, and potential for initial demand shocks from US downturn risks all suggest bracing for two-way volatility.
- And Consequent Patches of AXJ Downside: And this entails distinct pockets of AXJ slippage in the run-up to, and through the initial phases of intersecting Fed pivot and US elections.
