Three Take-aways:

- 1) US equity bulls retain conviction of US exceptionalism.
- 2) "Competitive pushback" from ECB backed EUR gains as Bund yields edged higher more than USTs.
- 3) RBI hold but retain option to hike on currency stability and cost-push/fiscal-demand pull risks.

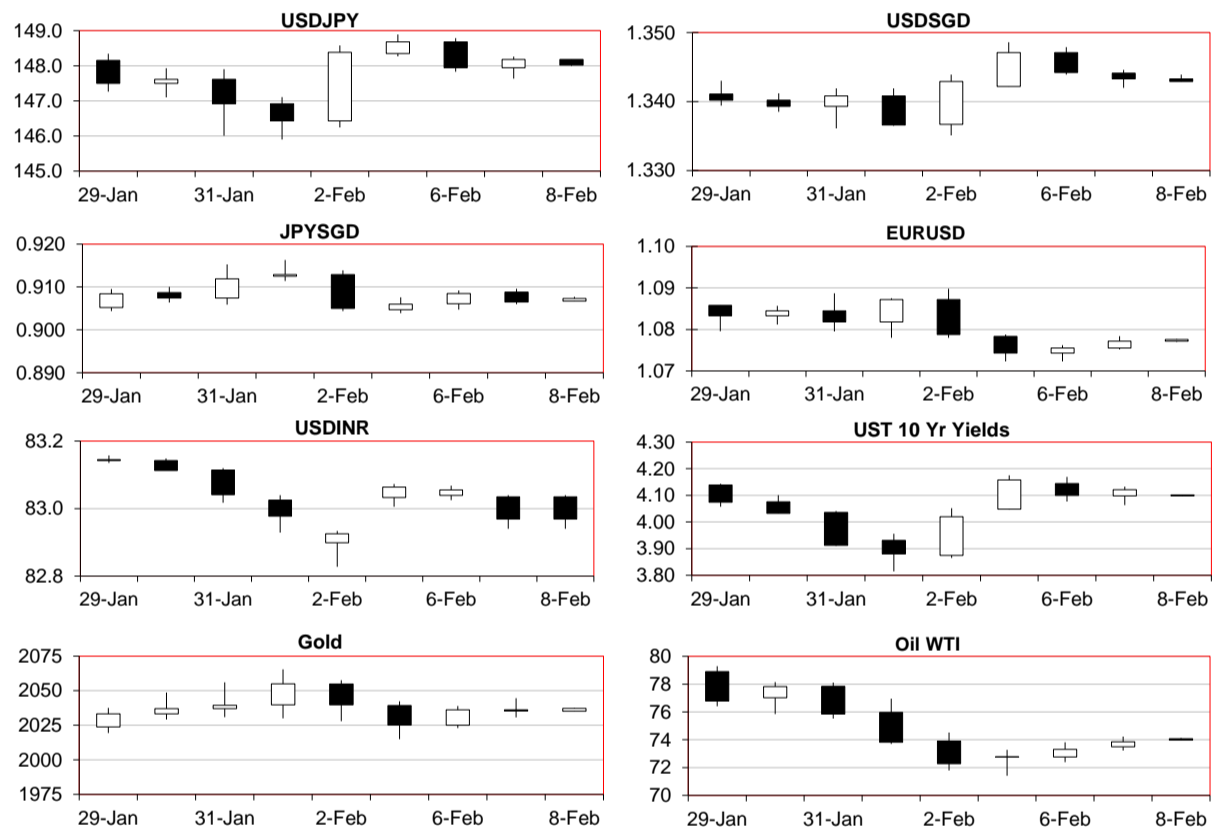

Conviction

- Conviction on US exceptionalism continued to power US equities rallies (S&P500: +0.8%; Dow: +0.4%; Nasdaq: +1.0%), with IT and consumer discretionary counters leading the gains.
 - Meanwhile, as "competitive pushback" on pivot bets played out, the ECB appeared to be the more convincing one, with Bunds yields edging up more than UST yields (2Y: +2bps; 10Y: +2bps).
 - ECB Schnabel threw caution at adjusting policy stance soon, noting the difficulty of last mile disinflation process as services inflation was "sticky" (with dialled up risks on Red Sea events) and labour market "resilient". Further, while remarking that the "peak of transmission" had probably passed, she also alluded that markets' aggressive pricing of central banks' pivot had "loosen[ed]" financial conditions. The EUR held on to gains following Schnabel's remarks, and was buoyant above mid-1.07. Nonetheless, weak German industrial production imply that bets for ECB cuts may be hard to shake off.
 - Across the Atlantic, FedSpeak saw Governor Kugler, Boston Fed President Collins and Minneapolis Fed Chief Kashkari and Richmond's Barkin all noncommittal on the timing of rate cuts and alluded to a preference to wait for more evidence of cooling inflation.
 - In Asia FX, AUD traded below mid-65 cents. Meanwhile, USD/JPY moved higher above 148 and USD/SGD traded sideways below mid-1.34.
 - Elsewhere, Brent crude prices rose ~1% and pushed past $79/bbl amid a mixed inventory report.
 - While crude oil inventories rose, US gasoline inventories declined, which could hint at a stronger demand for energy as geo-political flare-ups simmered in the background. After all, conviction on US airstrikes capping Red Sea woes eludes. Iran-backed Houthi militant group said it targeted two ships in the southern Red Sea, the latest in a string of attacks, while the US has vowed more strikes against Iranian forces and their proxies in the region.

Why the RBI Has No Budget to Ease

- All else equal, better than expected fiscal consolidation set to be delivered (FY23/24) and dangled* for FY24/25 ought to create space for the RBI turn monetary policy less restrictive.
 - But this is simply not the case. Fact is, the RBI does not derive any effective policy catalyst from the Budget; not unambiguously anyway.
 - And not just because this is an interim budget, subject to potential revisions after the elections. Instead, this also is a reflection of the mixed impact from ramped-up infrastructure spending, which is great for building economic capacity, but in the near-term liable for spots of inflationary pressures.
 - Especially when this collides with subdued subsidies, which means that cost-push risks are blended into the fiscal-demand pull risks. Simply put, the aggregated view of diminished fiscal impulse not sufficiently nuanced, potentially even misleading.
 - Admittedly, incremental fiscal (consolidation) support does alleviate rupee stability risks. But "incremental" with no effective policy influence is the operational reality for monetary policy.
 - And so that takes the RBI back to square one, where it is confronted by lingering cost-push risks, in the context of "twin deficit" liabilities and Fed pushback on pivot. In which case, prolonging the pause in restrictive settings, whilst retaining the option to hike if rupee stability is unexpectedly jeopardized, looks like the play book to avert "unforced errors".

*estimated FY23/24 deficit of 5.8% better than 5.9% target and 5.1% budgeted for FY24/25 exceeds consolidation trajectory targets.

FX Daily Outlook

- EUR/USD: Relative hawkish accents by ECB speakers (vis-a-vis Fed) could tempt weak test of 1.08.
- USD/JPY: Dial back of ECB/Fed pivot backs sustain buoyancy above mid-147.
- USD/SGD: Consolidation above 1.34 on China rescue hopes and pushback by ECB/Fed tussles.
- AUD/USD: Higher oil prices and hawkish RBA backstops 65 cents.
